Accepting that your relationship is over is hard, isn't it? You feel lonely and depressed, and you find yourself thinking about your ex all the time. Your heart is hurting, and you just feel like curling up in a ball and hiding from the world. All you want is for your ex to come back, however, it seems that the breakup is probably permanent, and you don't know how you're ever going to get over it. You can't see any light at the end of the tunnel, and you've started to let things slip. You just feel lethargic and nothing seems to interest you. You constantly keep looking at your phone to see if he's called. You search for him in the crowd every time you go out. It's starting to drive you crazy! Imagine for just a moment what it would be like to wake up one day and feel like you can get on with life again. If you could go one whole day without thinking about him. If your heart felt normal again and didn't feel like it was breaking. If you could laugh, smile, and be happy. That would have to be fantastic, wouldn't it? I know you can't imagine life without him at the moment, but what are you going to do? You could continue to wallow in your grief, and let life pass you by. You could try to pull yourself together a little and pretend that you're ok, even when you know you're not. You could read more relationship advice books, or you could learn from someone who's been exactly where you are today. That someone is me. I've been where you are. I know the pain you're going through. The feeling of desperation and loneliness. I know I can help you with your breakup recovery if you'll let me. All of my experience and knowledge have been combined into this breakup book, and I am absolutely positive
