

In Feasting With Panthers, the author of the Terrell Newman murder mysteries presents a true and gripping account of growing up in South Africa and finding himself involved in a murder on his seventeenth birthday. It takes in a wide range of extraordinary characters set against what the author describes as the unique human and physical geography of Cape Town, where a great diversity of ethnic and cultural traditions collide in freewheeling agitation, like disparate atoms in a cosmic meltdown. The narrative deftly moves between moments of profound sadness, high drama and hilarity with a compelling honesty and the narrative drive of a born storyteller, with many acute observations about human nature thrown in.
