

The Secret Bliss of Calliope Ipswich (Three Little Girls Dressed in Blue Book 2)

Excerpt: Blanches pretty forehead puckered with a slight frown. You dont like Fox as much as he likes you, do you, Calliope? Youre not in love with him. Calliope silently scolded herself for having let her countenance and words reveal her secret to Blanche. The truth was that she was not as sweet on Fox Montrose as he was on her. Yet there were secrets in her heart that could never be revealed to anyone not even to Blanche, not even to Calliopes own sisters. Therefore, she chose a counter maneuver with which to distract Blanche and said, Oh, I adore Fox! I just think these things may take time, you know, for me toto To really fall in love with him, you mean, Blanche finished. Yes. Perhaps that is what I mean, Calliope responded. Yet as they neared the Montrose house, trepidation welled up in Calliopes bosom, for she knew that if she hadnt fallen in love with Fox Montrose by now, she never would. Furthermore, she didnt want to. A secret bliss was nestled deep inside Calliope Ipswich. It had been nestled there from nearly the moment the Ipswich family had arrived in Meadowlark Lake all those months past. And though it was a bliss she owned in knowing something about herself that even her own sisters did not know, it likewise brought her pain at times for it was the very reason she knew she would never fall in love with Fox Montrose. Calliopes love was already spoken for and no one in all the wide world, save Calliope Ipswich herself, would ever know it.
