

Alan Johnson: Left Standing

Alan Johnson is believed by many to be the best party leader Labour never had. But he is also a man of the people - one of those few politicians who can strike a chord with ordinary people. From humble origins, he climbed to the top of the establishment, yet never lost touch with his roots. Elected to parliament in 1997, he has served as Home Secretary, Health Secretary, Education Secretary and Shadow Chancellor of the Exchequer. By contrast, Ed Miliband entered parliament in 2005 and served in the lesser government posts of Minister for the Cabinet Office, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change, before he was elected leader of the Labour Party. Johnson left school at fifteen, became a postman and worked his way up through the Union of Communication Workers to become its General Secretary, before becoming an MP. He is old-school Labour with a genuine working-class background. He supported David Miliband in his bid to become leader of the Labour Party after the resignation of Gordon Brown. But after serving just three-and-a-half months as Ed Milibands Shadow Chancellor, he resigned for personal reasons. Many politicians and pundits regard him as the Labour leader or even Prime Minister in waiting. This concise biography follows Alan Johnsons formative years growing up poor in south London, through to his influential involvement in the Labour Party.
