Not illustrated. 1806 Excerpt: ... that this performance is not read, because it was never completed; as if three volumes in folio would not content the most heroic appetite that ever existed! A Dream, a Poem. A Treatise of the Art of War. Lond. 1677, fol. said to have been much ridiculed<sup>6</sup>; but it is applauded by the Biographia. Poems on the Fasts and Festivals of the Church<sup>7</sup>. Printed, but never finished. I should act with regard to these as I should about the romance, not read them; not because they were never finished, but because they were ever begun. We are told his lordship always wrote when he had a fit of the gout, which it seems was a very impotent muse. f_Langbaine had been tollJ, that this piece was commended by many expert captains for the best of the kind extant in English; and thought that his lordships reputation joined with the earl of Roscommons, might be sufficient to atone for their countrys character in point of wit. Dram.-Poets, p.S7-A MS. copy of this production is in the library of Mr. Brand, and bears the following title: Poems on the chiefest Holy-daies in our Churches Kalendar, by Roger, Earl of Orrery, 1678. VOL. V. O The rest of his works were posthumous. Mr. Anthony, a Comedy. 1690, fol. Guzman, a Comedy. 1693, 4to. Herod the Great, a Tragedy. 1694, fol. Altemira, a Tragedy. 1702, 4to.8. All his dramatic pieces, but Mr. Anthony, have been published together in two vols. 8vo. Lond, 1739. His State Letters. Lond. 1742, fol.9. Lord Orrery was the younger brother of Richard, earl of Burlington and Cork, and fifth son of Richard, stiled the great earl of Cork. He was born in 1621, and by the credit of his father with lord deputy Falk...
